

Religions unite for day of selfless caring

By Tom Mack | Posted: September 26, 2014

Comments (0)

Members of different religions across the city will be coming together to hold a "Sewa Day".

The word sewa means carrying out selfless work for the community and on Wednesday, October 1, members of the Buddhist, Hindu, Jain and Sikh faiths will take part a day of community work at the Ramgarhia Centre in Ulverscroft Road in Leicester, where an elderly and disability support group meets.

Volunteers will provide a menu of tea, coffee, Indian sweets and snacks and fruit.

Cultural musical instruments such as dhol and tabla will also be played.

Riaz Ravat, from the St Philip's Centre in Evington which is organising the event, said: "Sewa Day is a global day and a regular date in the inter faith calendar of Leicestershire.

"On this day we witness acts of human kindness to support some of the most vulnerable. By working together, a common platform of unity is conveyed throughout the world".

1 1
g+1 Share
3 6
Tweet Share

Report this article

Get Involved! Upload your pics and stories here.

This crazy loophole allows to open the